Art, Culture & History: Recipes for Social Change?

କଳା, ସଂସ୍କୃତି ଓ ପ୍ରଗତି!

Can art & culture be crucial drivers of positive social change? In every society, arts and culture matter. Art and culture encourage freedom of expression, peacebuilding and sustainable development. Furthermore, the cultural dimension plays a vital role to improve the quality of development processes and achieve goals in a more sustainable way. Thus, increasingly, policymakers & practitioners seek to identify and build on the cultural resources, local knowledge, and creative forces available in the societies. Global leaders in business and politics are also increasingly aware of this and are investing in art and culture as a way of engaging with communities, improving lives and boosting economic growth. The panel will explore these ideas.

Doing well by doing good OR can Doing good do even better?

Four years since the CSR legislation has been in effect in India, it is vital to deliberate on the scope for CSR interventions to create positive and sustainable changes. There is great degree of consensus that by strategically practicing corporate social responsibility (CSR), a company can 'do well by doing good'; in other words, it can make a profit and make the world a better place at the same time. What comes next? The panellist will argue if companies can do EVEN BETTER by doing good.

Disruptive Social Innovations: Where are the new superheroes?

Social Entrepreneurs and start-ups working with innovative technologies at microscopic levels can be the best drivers of change. The time now is opportune for the start-ups to really stand up and demonstrate innovative products and services that help tackle the most pressing developmental challenges, especially in rural areas. We aim to augment their efforts by providing a platform to the rural areas. We aim to augment their efforts by providing a platform to the rural innovators and social entrepreneurs, and play the role of a connector between the innovators and the mentors, impact investors, funding agencies, incubators among others to be able to make rural innovations sustainable and scalable. The largest objective is to facilitate an ecosystem for rural innovators and social entrepreneurs.

Access to Justice: putting the power of law in the hands of people!

Access to legal services continues to be a challenge for a substantial segment of people globally, due to educational geographical, resource and social constraints. The problem has been compounded by the failure to mainstream legal-aid services, particularly for the marginalized sections at the grassroots levels. It is, thus, imperative to build systems in which laws and policies reside not only in books and courtrooms, but are within the grasp of every person. The panellist will discuss how to help put the power of law in the hands of people.

Day3

09.15 AM - 10.30 AM

Sessions 10: (Panel Discussion)

Citizen Engagement: Tapping the power of the Community!

Should 'Citizen Engagement', or tapping the power of the community, be at the centre of development agenda? How essential is it for grassroots development practitioners and policy advocates to harp on this framework- in which the community is the protagonist and people's role in governance, pivotal. A panel discussion on the experiences of change-makers attempting transformational work with grassroots communities.

Poverty to Prosperity through innovation & technology!

We live at a time of unprecedented innovation and technological change. However, they can be double-edged sword. On the one hand, harnessing frontier technologies is the surest path to deliver on the 2030 SDG agenda, and to end poverty for good, enable more sustainable patterns of growth and mitigate or even reverse decades of environmental degradation. On the other hand, technological disruption can also entrench inequality, further marginalize the poorest, and fuel reactionary movements against open societies and economies. The panel will help launch a dialogue about how to harness technology for the achievement of the SDGs, and in a larger and more profound sense, help make the world a better place.

Innovations in Agriculture for Food Security: adapting to our farmers' needs!

କୃଷି ଓ ଜୀବନ ଜୀବିକା: ଆମେ କେଉଁଠି?

The agricultural sector has seen substantial changes over the past century. Innovation is key to progress; innovation in agriculture and nutrition is the necessary path to the world's survival. However, innovation should not be for the happy few, but for all those involved in the food ecosystem, including farmers big and small from every part of the world. Moreover, innovation should be attuned to the local context and ensure that farmers reap the benefits of new technologies and solutions adapted to our farmers' needs. Panellists will debate the relevance of innovation and research for small and marginal farmers and the biggest challenges to drive sustainable agriculture for increased productivity and food security, particularly in the context of India and other similar ecosystems.
